taking of Vaux itself not one American was lost, although 100 Germans

For the first time, too, American aviators, in considerable number, did the reconnaisance for the advancing infantry and spotting for the artillery and dominated the air. There were a score of air battles. Three German and two American airplanes were lost.

The new American positions dominate Chateau-Thierry to such an extent an early evacuation of that important city by the Germans is

The battle was the biggest single operation by American troops, under American commanders and carried out on strictly American lines, since Get Control of Port in Fightthe Civil War. The Americans gained every objective and held it. Their officers had almost to use anned force to keep the impetuous Yankees from advancing further. Every German prisoner taken was filled with awe at the splendid courage of the Americans.
